Although it has been on the road long enough to become of age, Peck's Bad Boy is the same boy who amused everyone a generation ago and will continue to amuse for generations to come. Leroy J. French's company of vaudevillians presented this amusing piece at the opera house last night to a good audience in which there were more "boys" than there will be in school next September. Mr. French closes this week a year on the road, and after only two weeks rest will begin the next season, going over the same route and playing at the same houses as last season, which is as good a recommendation as any show can ask for.

Wind.

Nearly every one dislikes wind, whether in conversation or just ordinary windy wind.

When you are about to make a purchase and a salesman tells you this is just as good, when you have asked for something else, look out. That is wind of the most disagreeable sort.
